Worker's Compensation & Occupational Health

Important Workers' Compensation Statistics

Illness and work-related injuries account for about 28 million lost working days per year in the United States.

Illinois has the fourth highest workers' compensation rates, spending approximately $3 billion on employee benefits on more than 200,000 claims per year.

Men are more likely to get hurt on the job than women. But while men are more susceptible to traumatic and permanent injuries, women are more likely to file mental stress and cumulative-injury claims.

Although many workers aren't well versed in workers' compensation laws, they do understand they're entitled to see a doctor. A delay in providing medical treatment often results in an employee calling a lawyer.

The total cost of health insurance fraud in the United States (including untruthful medical claims) was more than $68 billion in 2008, resulting in a cost of $1,050 in added premiums for the average American family. Studies show that employers with aggressive return-to-work programs can reduce the cost of occupational disability an average of 40%, and non-occupational disability by 23%.

STEPS TO TAKE FOR ALL NON-EMERGENCY ON-THE-JOB INJURIES

1

The employee immediately reports the injury to a supervisor or human resources department. A comprehensive Employee's Report of Injury Form should be completed as well as an Injury Investigation Report.

2

The employee should bring the following on his/her visit:

- A photo ID.
- Any necessary paperwork the employer may provide, including an executed authorization form for medical treatment.
- The name and phone number of supervisor or contact person at the company.
- If applicable, the name and phone number of the company's workers' compensation insurance carrier.

3

The employee should go directly to PromptMed Urgent Care's facility.

Employee will notify the PromptMed staff upon arrival that he/she was injured on the job so the claim can be properly filed.

The employee will be seen and treated quickly, with compassion.

4

Following the visit, the employer will receive an email or fax from the provider about the employee's injury and any possible work restrictions, as well as information about the employee's follow up appointments and anticipated outcome of injury.

Our billing department will contact the employer to get verification and necessary information to process the claim.
